

FACULTY-LED PROGRAMS WITH

LOOP ABROAD

Why Study Abroad?

Study abroad programs grant students the chance to strengthen their vet school applications, while also providing hands-on opportunities to further develop their veterinary skills. During one of our programs, students are also able to immerse themselves in a new culture and environment, allowing them to learn more about the world at large.

Benefits of Studying with Loop Abroad

- Faculty who organize faculty-led programs through Loop Abroad travel on their program with us for free.
- Decide how involved you want to be in the program -- teach a course, participate along with the students, or sit back and relax!
- Each program focuses on small groups (a maximum of 12 students per group) led by experienced faculty.
- Students have the option of receiving course credit from their university or our school of record, University of Findlay, as well as earn veterinary and research hours.
- Students on faculty-led groups receive a discount on our regular tuition.
- Financial aid and payment plans are available.

Choose Your Adventure

With programs on four continents, Loop Abroad is a terrific choice for your program abroad. Depending upon your course interest, students can study elephants in Thailand, learn about wildlife conservation in South Africa, research marine fishes populations off the shores of the Galapagos, and more!

Loop Abroad was founded in 2009 with the focus of bringing students who love animals on international adventures to see the world and experience animal care and conservation in a new way. Partnering with local organizations already making a positive impact, Loop launched its first program in Chiang Mai, Thailand. Since then, we've expanded our programs to include more focus on veterinary education, animal science, and service. Loop Abroad now offers programs on four continents with options ranging from two weeks to a full semester. Contact us today to find the right program for you and your students!
